Everything you need to know about the 12th annual Boston GreenFest & TechExpo

From sweltering heat and flash floods to hurricanes and wildfires, the summer has been marked by increasingly extreme weather conditions that ought to get the alarm bells ringing. Research by climate scientists has shown that we have just 12 years — and possibly only as little as 18 months — to stem serious catastrophe caused by climate change. Thankfully, the Boston GreenFest & TechExpo returns next month to inspire the city to alter its environmental footprint while providing a positive experience that offers a hopeful vision of a sustainable future. Here's what you need to know about this year's big event.

What is the Boston GreenFest & TechExpo?

Back for its 12th year, the Boston GreenFest & TechExpo is the biggest environmental festival of its kind in the Northeast, which will take over approximately 300,000 square feet of Boston when it returns in August. Organized by the Foundation for a Green Future, the aim of the fest is to bring together leaders in a variety of industries — including financial, technology, health care, transportation, food, fashion and more — in order to encourage them to network and collaborate on ways to improve sustainability and environmental awareness. The three-day fest also hopes to educate and inspire everyday people to take up healthy and sustainable practices that they can implement in their daily lives.

What events will take place this year?

This year's programming will be centered around the theme of "Connecting Land and Sea," and there will be plenty of events that visitors can check out — all for free. The primary Boston GreenFest will take over the Rose Kennedy Greenway to Christopher Columbus Park along Boston's waterfront. Guests can expect all kinds of fun activities and eco-friendly vendors.

Another big component of the festivities is the GreenTech Expo, which will take place on Aug. 17 at the Grand Ballroom of the Boston Marriott Long Wharf Hotel, which will have robotics and other innovations on display. A Smart City Pavillion is also in the works, a collaboration of various environmentally-focused technologies, that will include everything from photobioreactors and smart grid tech to rain-harvesting sculptures and micro-wind turbines. Other activities include the Green Business Breakfast, which will also be held at the Boston Marriott Long Wharf Hotel. The event will honor attendees such as City Councilor Michelle Wu, New England Aquarium CEO Vikki Spruill, Blue Cross/Blue Shield Sustainability Director Monica Nakielski and others.

Attendees can also expect the return of the fest's EcoFashion Show, which will take place on Aug. 17 at the Boston GreenFest stage at Christopher Columbus Park, featuring designers such as Queen Adeline of Ghana, Rose Orelup of New York and DEVINTO of Boston. Other programming includes the Boston Green FilmFest, which will take place throughout the three days at Hennessy's Upstairs, as well as a live multicultural performance stage featuring a slew of global and local artists.

When is it?

The Boston GreenFest & TechExpo is free to attend and takes place Aug. 16-18. For more information, check out bostongreenfest.org.

Actress Adrienne C. Moore on the final season of 'Orange Is the New Black'

JOJO WHILDEN

The seventh and final season will be available to stream Friday, July 26. PAT KING

This weekend, the hit Netflix original series "Orange Is the New Black" will be closing the chapter on the inmates of Litchfield Prison for good. In this seventh and final season, the show remains as vibrant and of-the-moment as ever while giving fans conclusions to some of the characters they've come to love over the years. I caught up with actress Adrienne C. Moore, who plays Cindy on the show, to reflect on the impact of the show and what fans can expect of its final season.

This is the final season of "Orange Is the New Black," and we have seen the characters, such as Cindy, develop in huge ways. It must be amazing to look back at the show from where it began in Litchfield.

Yeah, well, the biggest thing I think for me — and I'm not speaking for everyone — but I can kind of speak for a lot of people in saying we've known this truth and we've lived with this reality for a while. So, while the magnitude of it is, yes, it's incredible and it sinks in like, "Wow, I'm not going to be working on 'Orange' after February," I think a lot of us had that reality back in February. We were filming the show all of last year and the top of this year. It was like we have been running this race for a long time. It's like, now you guys are seeing where we've been running since last year. I definitely had my moments of, you know, it's bittersweet. It's a ton of sadness but a lot of elation because seven years, to me, is a number of completion. That just means that there is a new chapter on the horizon. So, there is an excitement to look forward to that, while also knowing that I am not going to see so-and-so as much as I used to see them, I wonder if I'll stay in touch with so-and-so after this is over. We all got together a couple months ago because it was in time and the award nominations and for-your-consideration moments, and so that was us seeing each other since we had wrapped the show in February. And it was kind of like, at that point so many people had moved on to new and exciting projects and it was kind of like, okay, we got to jump back into this world. So, it was kind of like I am jumping back into this world and those feelings and emotions that I thought I had put to bed back in February.

It's one of the strongest TV ensembles maybe ever. Your performance in this season is incredible. Did working with such talented actors and actresses, as well as Jenji Kohan, help you elevate your game?

You definitely have to elevate your game, not only on set but the game elevation starts when Jenji and the writers send us the script, because they don't mince words, they don't apologize, they don't hand-hold. They're about telling and exposing the truth, challenging how we view things and how we see people. And so, it began there, with them writing this provocative story about these inmates who most people would have disregarded as criminals and not thought twice about. When you get the script and you see who these characters are that they're trying to reveal to the world there is a sense of, well, "I just can't get up there and say the lines, I have to bring this character to life. I have to make their story worth telling because there are so many stories." Every sentence has a story and there are so many women's stories to tell that you want to hear from, so to be a part of a show for seven seasons that gave light to Jenji's story was an honor and I didn't take it lightly at all.

Has the show given you a new perspective on the prison system in America?

I feel this opportunity was sort of beckoning me even before I was made aware. When I was in high school, I interned for the U.S. Attorney's Office. When I was in college, I worked in politics. I worked for the government, so I felt like I kind of got a sense. I would visit prisons. One of my close friends was a former chief of staff for one of the largest prisons in Georgia, so I had a chance to visit inmates and talk to them and get their perspective. So, I definitely became entrenched in the war. I used to even watch "Scared Straight" as a teen [laughs]. So, we actually did an episode that was similar to "Scared Straight" and I was like, "Oh, watch this episode before I know what to do!" This was definitely bringing all the experiences that I've had over the years, dating back since my childhood, and it culminated in this beautifully thought-provoking, engaging, challenging, heart-wrenching yet funny show, "Orange Is the New Black." Yeah, I definitely think it was a part of my future before I even realized it.

The season has never shied away from tackling ripped-from-the headlines subjects, like for-profit prisons and police brutality. What can you tell us about the final season?

What I like about every season that ends is that there's always the possibility for a new beginning and it leaves you wondering, what is that new beginning going to be? I think for some inmates you'll learn what their new beginning will be and others you'll still be kind of questioning. I think that, as a person who has been a fan of not only this show but other shows that have invoked that kind of audience response from people, you always want to leave it where you know some things and other things you just won't. But, what's going to happen? You want it to end on a high note and I definitely think we did that this season. I definitely think we gave some characters the closing that fans wanted. Others, we gave them a closing that fans didn't want. And then some you don't know but you hope the best for them. Like with Cindy, you hope that she will learn from her mistakes and she will learn to move forward and she will learn to be her authentic self, but also to take responsibility. To take responsibility for what and how she contributed to things being the way they are.

The seventh and final season of "Orange Is the New Black" will be available to stream Friday, July 26, on Netflix.

The filmmaker's ninth film hits theaters this weekend. PAT KING

Well, summer just got a little better, ladies and gentlemen. Here comes Quentin Tarantino. For his ninth feature — and possibly his penultimate full-length — the ever-eccentric filmmaker has decided to take on the glory days of 1960s Hollywood and the evils that co-opted the hippy generation of their chance to spread their message in a positive and meaningful way. The film, "Once Upon a Time In Hollywood," opens today in select theaters and finds Tarantino firing on all of his creative cylinders that made him such a singular voice in modern film.

Like his best work, "Hollywood" is an ensemble affair that follows multiple story lines that intersect in the end. The first is the friendship of TV and film actor Rick Dalton, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, and his longtime friend and stuntman Cliff Booth, played by Brad Pitt. Dalton was once a TV star who tried and failed to leave a successful show to transition into a leading man on film. We catch up with him amidst his slow climb back into relevance as he chases small parts as "heavies" on primetime television. After he has been stripped of his license after getting caught drinking and driving, Booth has transitioned from taking the hits for Dalton to driving him to and from gigs and juicing up his fragile ego.

The two are inseparable friends, and their relationship is one of the best on-screen friendships to grace the silver screen in some time. Both leading actors dig into their roles with such a sense of fun that their camaraderie is nothing short of infectious.

Leonardo DiCaprio and Brad Pitt star in "Once Upon a Time in Hollywood." ANDREW COOPER

While Dalton is down and out, career-wise, he learns some valuable advice early on to buy property in Hollywood. Tarantino uses this story line to put Dalton as a next-door neighbor to actress Sharon Tate and her famous director husband, Roman Polanski, on Cielo Drive. The narrative device gives Tarantino the poetic license to retell the events of the Manson family attacks on Tate, played by Margot Robbie, and Polanski that fateful night. Without any spoilers or cameo reveals, the film is chock-full of surprises that will be talked about well after its release.

With Tate's story line, Tarantino takes the opportunity to introduce the actress to a new audience that may have only known her from the grim headline. He takes her back from the Manson narrative, showing her as the eager and kind budding starlet that she was. In one scene, she heads to a matinee screening of the Dean Martin-starring action-comedy film, "The Wrecking Crew," in which she plays the comic relief. After convincing the theater staff that she is who she says she is, she sits down to enjoy while Tarantino chooses not to superimpose Robbie into the film, leaving in footage of the actual slain actress.

Another masterful sequence shows Dalton trying to make an impact as the villain on a big network western show and grappling with his insecurities while the production tries to work around his inner crisis. While Tarantino shows you how a western is made, we also follow Booth as he has a showdown with the Manson family at their adopted Spahn Ranch home. This scene plays beautifully against the other, as the tense meetup on the ranch borrows heavily from the tropes of famous westerns of the day.

When Tarantino hits that narrative spike with a sledgehammer, you can almost picture him enthusiastically pitching his ideas with a crazed look in his eyes to a room full of film executives, acting out dialogue and expanding upon his vision with his motor-powered wit. All of that infectious energy is on full display with "Hollywood" and results in the most all-out fun and well-constructed film the director has made in years.

The true-life neo-Nazi redemption movie will be in theaters and on demand July 26.

PAT KING

How far can someone go into the dark before they are no longer redeemable? That is the central question to the real-life story of Bryon Widner, told in the powerful new film "Skin," by Academy Award-winning Israeli director Guy Nattiv. Widner, an ex-militant neo-Nazi from Indiana, underwent a series of procedures to remove numerous hateful tattoos from his body, including ones on his face, after defecting from the hateful group that he considered his family for so many years.

The film stars British actor Jamie Bell in a captivating portrayal of Widner that should rank among the year's best performances come award season. The film had a long road up to this point, as Nattiv had originally adapted Widner's tale of redemption as a short film before getting the green light for a full-length feature. Nattiv first heard of Widner's story while reading a copy of the Israeli equivalent of The New York Times, Haaretz, in a cafe in Tel Aviv, and seeing photos of Widner's transformation from being fully covered with vile and hateful tattoos to being the upstanding citizen he is today.

"I was blown away that this could happen," says Nattiv, after realizing he needed to tell Widner's story on film. "My grandfather taught me and my family how to focus on forgiveness and acceptance rather than just being angry all of your life. This was it. This was the story."

In the time before many of the hateful attacks we have seen all over the world, film executives on both coasts scoffed at the idea of telling the story of white skinheads from "the backyard of America." But Nattiv knew he needed to meet with Widner, and got the chance after Widner appeared in the MSNBC documentary "Erasing Hate" in 2011. Once they met, Nattiv knew he was on the right track.

"It was a magical meeting because I was so afraid to meet an ex-skinhead and I was the first Israeli who he met," says Nattiv. "I was concerned, but he was such a nice, intelligent man who went through a lot in his life. I told him I wanted to tell his story and he said, 'I would be honored,' and he signed his life rights on a napkin."

The film portrays two crucial relationships that helped Widner escape his toxic life: his romantic relationship with his girlfriend Julie (Danielle MacDonald), a single mother of three girls who has experience defecting from the white power community, and Daryl Lamont Jenkins, the founder of the organization One People's Project which helps to reform white supremacists. Jenkins is played by "Luke Cage" himself, Mike Colter, in the film and remains one of Widner's closest friends to this day.

Nattiv was so blown away by the amazing work that Jenkins has done over the years that he is already planning on writing a film to tell his life story in the future.

"Daryl became a friend and like family to me," says Nattiv, of his admiration for Jenkins. "Whenever I have a screening with him and do Q&As … After every screening, I say, 'There are a lot of superhero movies right now and superhero stories. But, the real superhero is here right now, Daryl Jenkins.' And he always gets a standing ovation."

"Skin" will be in theaters and on demand July 26.

Are you going places?

Or looking for places to go?

Managing your benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH) alone may not be enough. If you are on BPH therapy and visiting the bathroom frequently, you may have an overactive bladder (OAB).

The immediate need to 'go' interrupts your day and night – and it may not be caused by your BPH.

- Do you have to use the bathroom at least 8 times a day?
- Do you still wake up 2 or more times each night to use the bathroom?
- Do you experience a need to use the bathroom immediately (urinary urgency)?

If these symptoms disrupt your day and night, you may also have a condition called OAB.

A clinical research study is testing the safety and effectiveness of an investigational drug in men on BPH therapy experiencing OAB symptoms. Over 1000 participants in over 135 study centers across North America and Europe are expected to take part in the COURAGE Study.

For further information about the COURAGE Study, visit www.couragestudy.com or contact:

Study center: Bay State Clinical Trials Inc.

Address: 521 Mount Auburn St, Suite 200, Watertown MA

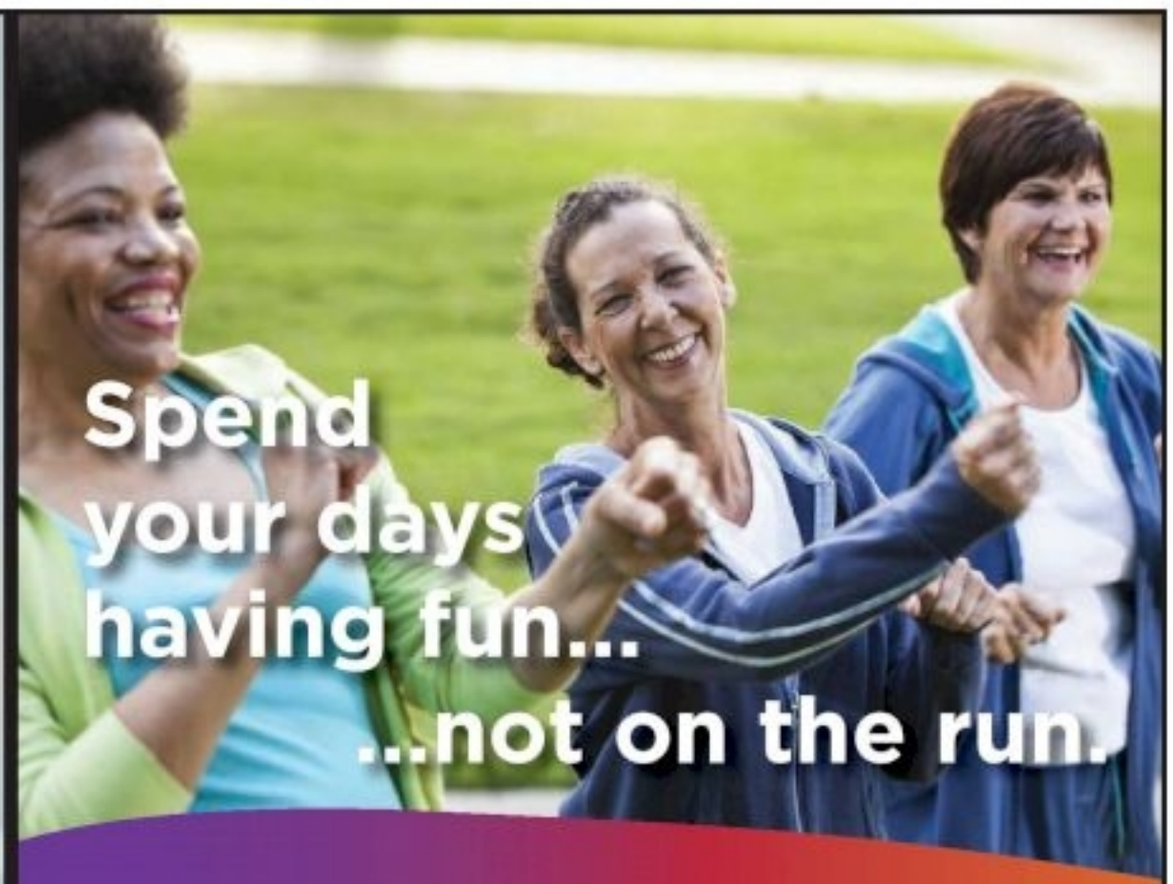
Contacting us does not mean that you must join the study or that you will be able to participate.

COURAGE



Spend your days having fun... ...not on the run.

Take control of your life and your bladder.

Overactive Bladder (OAB) with Urinary Incontinence (UI) occurs when you cannot control the muscle contractions of your bladder and urine leaks unexpectedly. It's a condition that can cause extreme inconvenience on your everyday life. The Apollo Study, which is enrolling now, is researching a new investigational drug for OAB.

You May Be Eligible for This Study If You:

- ✔ Are 18 to 75 years old
- ✔ Have had symptoms of OAB with Urinary Incontinence for a period of at least 6 months
- ✔ Had an inadequate response or limiting side effects to previous treatments

Participants will receive study-related care at no cost.

Turning a new fitness 'Paige' during pregnancy

Being pregnant doesn't mean putting your workout routine on pause. Fitness superstar Paige Hathaway shares tips on how to be the best you during pregnancy.

JEFF TOMKO

But when the flawless fitness model's sculpted six-pack, which has graced countless fitness magazine covers and has earned her over 4 million Instagram followers, began giving way to an expanding baby bump, well, even Hathaway became a bit overwhelmed by her body transformation.

"I'm not gonna lie, gaining 30 pounds so far has been difficult because I'm so used to having abs," Hathaway, 32, admits. "Even my muscle definition has gone down because of gaining a lot of water weight."

Starting a family has been a goal for the 32-year-old for a while, and after the initial body-change shock, Hathaway quickly learned that it's now all about baby.

"This pregnancy has taught me so much already," she says. "It's taught me how to not be selfish and put my baby first. As long as she's healthy and growing on the right track, that's all that matters.

Hathaway's child-first mentality, however, doesn't mean putting a pause on her vigorous workout routine — and it doesn't have to for most expecting mothers.

While studies have shown that many women may reduce their exercise during pregnancy, especially toward the third trimester, it's been proven that maintaining a consistent exercise regimen greatly benefits women during this time.

Some of the benefits include an increase of energy levels, reduction of lower-back pain, leg swelling, even "morning sickness." According to some studies, maintaining a strong core may possibly help improve stamina when it comes time for delivery.

For Hathaway (@PaigeHathaway), after getting used to her body changes, especially her baby kicking ("It really is kind of like being possessed by an alien," Hathaway says; "Wow, what a feeling!), it took a few easy tweaks to continue performing most of her normal (and well-documented) routine. She's eliminated exercises involving abdominal crunching — squats, leg presses — from her workout. "Bringing my stomach to my knees is uncomfortable to me and I don't want to put too much pressure on my midsection," she says.

Hathaway, a Liv Body pregnancy-safe supplement spokeswoman ("Use code PAIGE20 at checkout," she says) also opts now for upper-body exercises from an incline to reduce lower-back stress.

Based on her experience as an expecting mother, Hathaway says there's no reason women can't continue doing their normal routine.

The biggest misconception among exercise during pregnancy, she says, is that you need to scale back your workout, or modify your routine with such watered-down (read: boring) exercises that it's no longer fun to work out. Quite the opposite, she says, as long as you're able to find balance between listening to your body and pushing too hard. And also, listen to your doctor.

From there, continue pumping iron, training for your next marathon, or just taking long, relaxing walks — there's no need to skip your workouts. Hathaway, who says she maintains her four- to five-day-a-week workout schedule, still says go all-in with your workout — safely, of course.

"Go on, mama, lift those weights while you're pregnant," Hathaway says. "Whether you ran marathons, did CrossFit or Pilates, or played sports, go on with your bad self and continue to be awesome."

Paige's pregnancy workout

Hathaway admits that there are days during her pregnancy when fatigue affects her workouts. So don't feel like you're alone. The fitness superstar put together this effective and easy-to-perform full-body workout that can be done virtually anywhere. "You're working extra-hard to create this little tiny human inside you," Hathaway says. "Here's the perfect workout you can perform at home or at the gym that'll help you save time."

Instructions: Perform 2 to 3 sets, 10 reps each

- Squat to Dumbbell Arnold Press
- Seated Pistol Squats
- Lunge to DB Biceps Curls
- Glute Bridge to Incline Alternating DB Chest Press
- Side Lunge to Single-Arm Row
- Kneeling Lunge to Overhead Press
- DB Row to DB Deadlift
- Modified Burpee (placing a bench in front of you, place your hands to bench, then step legs back, sort of resembling a plank position. Then bring legs back to front, and reach up on your toes (don't jump)

Aries Be careful what you reveal to others. Someone will use the information you share against you. A personal matter needs to be addressed before you can make a positive move.

Taurus Maintain balance and integrity, regardless of what others do. If you stay calm and focus on what's important to you, everything else will fall into place. Romance is highlighted.

Gemini Make a domestic or relationship adjustment. You don't have to put up with abuse or someone's bad habits. Do whatever it takes to make your life better.

Cancer If you want something to happen, it's up to you to do the legwork. You can make a difference if you put your energy toward a cause or project that matters to you.

Leo Refuse to let the actions of others upset you. Look for the positive in everything, and make choices based on knowledge and experience, not on what others lead you to believe.

Virgo If you gather information about your heritage, you'll come across something that intrigues you or provides insight into your personality. Romance will enrich an intimate relationship.

Libra Draw on your experience to help you make a decision. You'll have to take action if you want to avoid being put in a position that disrupts your status or reputation.

Scorpio Channel your energy into your responsibilities, profession or anything that will help you get ahead. Use your experience, charm and wisdom to entice others to see things your way.

Sagittarius Think big, but be moderate when spending money, consuming food and drink or making promises you may not be able to keep. Focus on knowledge, personal growth and health.

Capricorn The changes you make at home will affect your relationships or possibly go against code. Get your facts straight and your plans approved before you begin.

Aquarius Refuse to let others' actions influence you emotionally. If you dwell on what you cannot change, you will miss out on something that you can do to make your life better.

Pisces Participate in functions that make a difference in your community or bring someone from your past back into your life. An offer you receive will grab your interest. EUGENIA LAST

Mueller says he did not exonerate Trump as Republicans assail inquiry

The former FBI director appeared for close to four hours before the Judiciary Committee.

Former Special Counsel Robert Mueller GETTY IMAGES

Former special counsel Robert Mueller on Wednesday said in dramatic congressional testimony he had not exonerated President Donald Trump of obstruction of justice and defended the integrity of his inquiry under repeated attacks by conservative Republican allies of the president.

Mueller initially testified he would have sought to indict Trump were it not for a Justice Department policy against charging a sitting president. But hours later he corrected himself and said "we did not reach a determination as to whether the president committed a crime."

Answering questions publicly for the first time on his inquiry, Mueller appeared for eagerly anticipated testimony in two back-to-back televised hearings that carried high stakes for Trump and Democrats who are split between impeaching him or moving on to the 2020 election.

The former FBI director, who spent 22 months investigating Russian interference in a "sweeping and systematic fashion" in the 2016 U.S. election to help Trump and the president's conduct, appeared for more than 3½ hours before the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee.

Mueller then appeared before the House Intelligence Committee for more questioning. Democrats control the House, while Trump's fellow Republicans control the Senate.

The Judiciary Committee's Democratic chairman, Jerrold Nadler, praised Mueller and said no one, including Trump, is "above the law." The Intelligence Committee's Democratic chairman, Adam Schiff, accused Trump's 2016 campaign of "disloyalty to country" for inviting, encouraging and making full use of Russian election meddling.

But Trump's Republican allies on the committees tried to paint Mueller's investigation as unfair to the president, with Louie Gohmert heatedly telling him "you perpetuated injustice," and conservative Rep. Guy Reschenthaler calling the manner in which the inquiry was conducted "un-American."

"Welcome, everyone, to the last gasp of the Russian collusion conspiracy theory," said Devin Nunes, the Intelligence Committee's top Republican.

Mueller's 448-page report, released April 18 in redacted form, did not reach a conclusion on whether Trump committed the crime of obstruction of justice in a series of actions aimed at impeding the inquiry, but did not exonerate him.

Democratic Rep. Ted Lieu asked Mueller during the first hearing whether the reason he did not bring a criminal indictment against Trump was the Justice Department's longstanding policy crafted by its Office of Legal Counsel against bringing criminal charges against a sitting president.

"That is correct," Mueller said.

THE FOREMAN FORECAST: NOT EXONERATED

ANALYSIS

TOM FOREMAN

GETTY IMAGES

"No collusion. No obstruction."

President Trump has chanted those words for months now, insisting that is the prime finding of the now-completed Russia investigation. He's bellowed them in speeches, he's shouted them at reporters, and he's tweeted them.

But make no mistake, Trump's claim is not true. It is a lie.

If you take one thing away from the extraordinary congressional testimony of Robert Mueller, the man whose team wrote the report, it should be that simple truth: Trump has not been exonerated.

To the contrary, Mueller's report found that Team Trump had a lot of contact with Russians who wanted Trump to win the 2016 election. The report showed that Trump's insiders, while never entering an actual conspiracy to promote Russian efforts to help, nonetheless welcomed them.

And when the investigation was launched, President Trump repeatedly discouraged cooperation and refused to be interviewed, even as people with ties to his team misled and lied to the special counsel. These are facts.

So why wasn't Trump charged with obstruction of justice when almost any other American likely would have been? Mueller says that option was never on the table — no matter what the facts might show — because the Department of Justice long ago concluded it would be unconstitutional to indict a sitting president.

To be clear, Mueller is not saying Trump should be indicted or impeached. He's simply saying that choice was not in play and it is not his call to make now.

All this searing testimony produced no visible effect on the Republicans questioning Mueller. One after another they tried to impugn the special counsel's motives, echoed the call of "witch hunt," steered away from any discussion of the troubling evidence, and played the role of a faithful choir in the Church of Trump.

And of course, they came out of the hearing calling Mueller and his report hopelessly compromised by alleged and unproven Democratic influence.

But even in Washington, facts still matter. And the facts in the Mueller report, and now in his congressional testimony — as stumbling, even bumbling, as it seemed at times — paint a damning picture of a president neck-deep in highly questionable behavior … no matter what Trump and his acolytes claim.

Meek Mill granted new trial on 2008 drugs, weapons charges

A Superior Court panel agreed that Judge Genece Brinkley was no longer impartial.

Rapper Meek Mill. REUTERS

Meek Mill, a rapper who has become an advocate for reform of the U.S. criminal justice system, is entitled to a new trial on drugs and weapon charges that have kept him on probation for a decade, a Pennsylvania appeals court ruled on Wednesday.

A three-judge Pennsylvania Superior Court panel agreed that Philadelphia Judge Genece Brinkley, who presided over a 2008 trial that resulted in his conviction, was no longer impartial, as Meek Mill's attorneys have argued. It ordered a replacement for Brinkley in the case.

The sole witness against Meek Mill at his 2008 trial was a discredited Philadelphia narcotics squad officer who is no longer with the city's police force.

"Williams' right to be tried before an impartial judge is necessary in this case because the trial judge heard highly prejudicial testimony at the first trial, which was a bench trial, and made credibility determinations in favor of a now discredited witness and against Williams," President Judge Jack A. Panella wrote in an 18-page opinion.

In November 2017 Brinkley sentenced the rapper to up to four years in prison, saying a pair of arrests violated probation conditions she set following his 2008 convictions. He served five months before the state's top court granted him bail.

The arrests, one for dangerous driving while shooting a New York City music video, did not result in convictions.

After the sentence, Meek Mill, whose given name is Robert Williams, became a cause celebre for musicians, celebrities and criminal justice reform campaigners who said his case was typical of a U.S. legal system that treats minorities unjustly. The rapper is African-American.

"I'd like to thank the Pennsylvania Superior Court for overturning my conviction and granting me a new trial," Mill said on Twitter. "The past 11 years have been mentally and emotionally challenging, but I'm glad that justice prevailed and my clean record has been restored."

The Philadelphia District Attorney's Office said in a statement it welcomed the appeals court decision and was reviewing its options regarding a new trial.

A representative for Judge Brinkley did not immediately return calls.

Mill's song "Going Bad," on which he collaborated with Drake, hit No. 6 on the U.S. charts this year. His other hit songs include "All Eyes on You" and "Dangerous."

Screen action legend Rutger Hauer dies

Dutch actor Rutger Hauer, best known for his role in science fiction classic Blade Runner, died on July 19 after a short illness, Dutch news agency ANP reported on Wednesday, citing his family. He was 75.

Hauer, whose funeral took place in the Netherlands on Wednesday, appeared in a total of over 100 Dutch and international movies. He won a Golden Globe in 1988 for his role in Escape from Sobibor.

In Blade Runner, Hauer played the part of android Roy Batty, the adversary of "blade runner" Rick Deckard, played by Harrison Ford.

Hauer starred in Dutch classics and Hollywood blockbusters as well as in a whole range of B-movies, in which he was mostly cast as the villain.

"I'm not very good at judging movie scripts," he said in 1994, adding that the less budget a movie had, the more they were willing to pay him.

Hauer, who led a quiet life in the north of the Netherlands when not in Hollywood, used his money and fame to help children and pregnant women with HIV/Aids through his non-profit Starfish Association.

Dutch director Paul Verhoeven, who made five movies and TV series with Hauer, said he had lost his "alter ego."

"He was to me what Marcello Mastroianni was to Fellini. I have only good memories." REUTERS

Traveling to the Antarctic and Arctic is easier than ever

Quark Expeditions launched a brand new ship that makes traveling to the Antarctic and Arctic accessible.

BECCA GLASSER-BAKER
Rebecca.Glasser@metro.us

An image from one of the zodiacs. DAVID MERRON

Traveling to the Antarctic or Arctic is easier than ever. If you ever wanted to take a trip to the North Pole — or stop by Santa's workshop — you're in luck, that dream is now a possibility. Quark Expeditions is the first company to bring tourists to the polar regions. They've been working in the polar regions for over three decades.

Andrew White, the president of Quark Expeditions, told the press that, "Once this place gets to it, it stays with you."

As he spoke with press about his polar travels, images filled the room with the sights and the sounds of these vast wildernesses. The sounds of birds and other creatures brought to life this rugged paradise. The visuals invited and encouraged viewers to be a part of it all. Part of its beauty, part of its symphony, and part of its world. From that alone, it's easy to see how the quickly the polar regions can captivate a person.

Before I heard about Quark Expeditions, I never thought traveling somewhere so elusive was even possible. It was embedded in my mind that the Antarctic and the Arctic were places only elite scientists and explorers to go. I never thought it was somewhere the average person could travel too.

If you're interested in making a trek to either pole, Quark is launching a brand-new polar expedition boat called the Ultramarine. The Ultramarine is first set to take sale in the Antarctic in 2020/2021.

White said in a press release that, "This one-of-a-kind ship will provide passengers from across the globe an ultra-immersive, ultra-inspiring, ultra-exciting polar experience second to none."

This adventure caters to all different interests which will now include flightseeing (on a helicopter), hiking, stand-up paddleboarding, and other exciting expeditions. Although there is no guarantee that you will see wildlife on any expedition, there is a strong possibility you might spot some Humpback whales, penguins, seals and more.

The new ship offers the largest cabins available for a vessel in this class. Each room features a small deck, so even while you're in bed, you can still take in all the beautiful sights.

White also spoke about something he often experiences when traveling to these rugged terrains, and he calls it "maximum aliveness." At first, the concept seemed hard to understand, but he explained that "maximum aliveness" means, "We become more alive by simply changing our environments, particularly through adventure. When we intentionally put ourselves in a unique setting where we can no longer count on things as they were, our senses become more finely attuned and our instincts sharpen—it's a sure ticket to revitalized awareness."

Sox set for showdown vs. Yanks

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Sox are now 12-7 in the month of July, with their last real ugly series coming back in late June when they were torched by the Yankees in London.

Showing that they're at least close to being on equal footing with their rivals is paramount for the Red Sox this weekend, even if catching them in the division is likely out of the question. Even with a four game sweep of the Bombers (which the Sox actually did pull of in early August last year), this year's group would still trail the Yankees by over five games.

The focus moving forward for the Sox is more to show they're capable of beating teams they could potentially meet in the postseason, and – ya know – actually get into the postseason. As of Wednesday afternoon, Alex Cora's club was two games behind Oakland for the final wild card spot.

Bats over arms

Like with the Red Sox, the Yankees strength lies with their offensive capabilities. New York is second, behind the Red Sox, in terms of runs scored in MLB this season with 580 runners having crossed the dish. The Yanks also have posted 170 home runs in 2019, good for fourth in MLB (the Red Sox are 11th in homers with 152).

On the mound, however, things haven't always been pretty this season for the Yankees. Aaron Boone's boys have a team ERA of 4.09, which is 10th in the league (the Sox are 19th with a 4.67 ERA).

New York has gotten this far with quantity over high quality. Masahiro Tanaka, James Paxton, C.C. Sabathia and Domingo German (the four pitchers who the Sox will face this weekend) are all capable of having an outstanding night against a top-notch team. But none of them are guarantees to make it out of the second inning either.

Paxton, who leads the Yanks in strikeouts with 108 this year, was lit up by the Colorado Rockies this past Sunday night at Yankee Stadium in an 8-4 New York loss.

And you'll recall that Tanaka was just as bad as Rick Porcello in that unforgettable Saturday fireworks display in London, as he was pulled in the first inning after giving up six earned runs.

The Red Sox pitching staff, of course, is also as shaky as a San Andreas Fault tremor.

Chris Sale has finally looked right in his last two starts (giving up a grand total of two earned runs in 12 innings of work), but toppling the Yankees on Sunday Night Baseball will be as stiff a test as he's faced all season.

No doubt, the Sox will need to keep raking if they want to gain any more momentum this weekend. They've averaged 5.91 runs per game since the All-Star break and have also started to receive the type of timely hits that propelled them to a World Series title last year.

Christian Vazquez's pinch-hit dinger to break a 2-2 tie in the seventh inning of the Red Sox' win over the Rays Tuesday night was the type of hit that can spark a club.

VSiN Nuggets

The Red Sox just passed the 100-game mark earlier this week in Tampa Bay. That meaningful sample size makes this the perfect time for bettors to take a deep analytical dive.

The first thing to note is that baseball…and "the baseball" has changed in 2019. Scoring is up because of an aerodynamically friendlier sphere. In 2018, American League offenses averaged 4.5 runs per game, while pitchers allowed 4.6 runs per game (losing interleague play). This season, those numbers are up to 4.9 both ways (data from baseball-reference.com).

A few Red Sox hitters are receiving criticism for dropping from last year's performance levels. Using the standard "slash" line of batting average/on-base percentage/slugging percentage, Mookie Betts has fallen noticeably from a stunning .346/.438/.640 to a still productive .282/.396/.479. J.D. Martinez is down from .330/.402/.629 to an effective but not spectacular .287/.360/.515. Andrew Benintendi is down a bit.

But the offense as a whole has largely stood pat relative to the league. Xander Bogaerts, Rafael Devers, and Vazquez are way up. It all comes out in the wash. Betts and Martinez were likely to regress from career performances. Others picked up the slack.

JUST GIVE BRADY WHAT HE WANTS

OPINION

DANNY PICARD

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com. Follow him on Twitter @dannypicard

Tom Brady is entering the final year of his contract.

There's no reason to panic. But it's certainly something to keep an eye on. Because after all, who else do the New England Patriots have at quarterback?

My initial answer to that question is: Who cares? This is Brady's team, and it should be Brady's team until he decides to call it quits. He's earned that.

Putting all emotional ties to the greatest QB of all time aside, the correct response is actually: Nobody. The Patriots have nobody else at the quarterback position. They have chosen to ride this out with Brady at the helm, and whenever that ship starts to sink, they're going down with Brady at the helm.

OK, so there are backups in Brian Hoyer, Jarrett Stidham, and Danny Etling. But the only way any of those three see the field in a meaningful game is if there's a blowout or if Brady gets injured.

Brady is the Patriots' only option. So, for once, it's time for the Patriots to reward him as such.

What would be the reason for Brady entering the 2019 NFL season without a contract extension? Do we think Brady is the one who's rejecting contracts because he wants to test out the free agent market next offseason, or because he's thinking about only playing one more year? Or are the Patriots simply just being the Patriots?

It's 100 percent the latter. Bill Belichick is doing business the only way he knows how. And 99 percent of the time, I'm on Belichick's side when it comes to the way he handles these business matters. Consider this the one percent in which I disagree with him.

That one percent of disagreement comes with a whole lot of confusion, perhaps more than anything. The idea that you'd be playing hardball with Brady at this stage is nothing more than foolish and unnecessary.

Think about it. Jimmy Garoppolo is gone. He's not walking back through those doors. You can try to tell me all you want that the San Francisco 49ers can choose to opt out of their five-year, $137.5 million contract with Garoppolo after the 2019 season — which they can, at a cap charge of only $4.2 million. But they won't. And even if they did, the 49ers would be opting out for a reason, a reason that wouldn't scream to other teams, "Let's go out and sign Garoppolo!"

If you're the Patriots, are you really going to sit around and wait to see if San Francisco cuts Garoppolo by the deadline of April 1, 2020? Give me a break. Let it go. The Jimmy G dream is dead. His time in New England is over.

But again, who cares? Brady is still the Patriots quarterback. And that's a great thing, even as he turns 42 years old in August.

Don't give me the "what if he gets hurt" excuse either. You could literally say that about everyone in the NFL. The Patriots should cross that bridge when and if they ever even get to it.

So again, what's the hold up? You have to assume that Belichick wants to wait it out and see what a 42-year-old Brady looks like in the final year of his current deal. Which is a ridiculous mindset to have, if you're Belichick. But that has to be the only logical reason that we're even discussing this right now.

And the only logical answer is to give Brady what he wants, and to give it to him before the season begins.

There's really no other option.

NFL betting season preview

VSiN

With the sports betting calendar fairly limited in late July, you're now hearing a lot of predictions for the coming pro football season. Be careful placing too much weight on them. Too many in the mainstream and sports betting media are good at bluster and bad at math.

Regarding NFL "Regular Season Win Totals," it's not uncommon to hear a pundit say something like "if they win all their home games, they'll only have to win two or three on the road to cash the ticket." Like, it's that easy to win all your home games in a parity-packed league!

It's much harder to go 7-1 or 8-0 at home than many realize. Only five teams managed it last season (New England, Kansas City, Dallas, Chicago, Los Angeles Rams), three the year before (Philadelphia, Minnesota, New Orleans). None of those were duplicates.

The key here is that too many casual fans and pseudo-experts equate "being favored" with winning the game. Even a team that's favored by point spreads in seven or eight home games won't be expected to win that many.

Imagine a team that's a 60 percent favorite to win every home game. Will they go 8-0 because they're always favored? Believe it or not, that projects to 4.8 wins and 3.2 losses. (Easy math, eight games times .60 is 4.8).

A team that's a 70 percent favorite to win every home game is projected to finish with 5.6 wins and 2.4 losses. Seventy percent is a high number, and we're nowhere near 7-1 or 8-0 yet.

Even an 80 percent favorite in every game would be projected to finish with 6.4 wins and 1.6 losses. At 80 percent we're not even "rounding" to 7-1 yet, let alone 8-0.

A team must be 82 percent in every game to "round" up to seven wins, 88 percent for a solid seven.

How many NFL teams do you believe are 88% to win each of their home games?

If you're not used to thinking in percentages, let's do it with point spreads. In standard point spread to money line conversions, a 3-point favorite is about 60 percent to win the game, a 6-point favorite is about 70 percent, an 8.5 or 9-point favorite is about 80 percent, and an 11.5-point favorite is about 88 percent.

Whenever you hear somebody say they believe an NFL team is going to go 7-1 at home, ask them if they think that team will be about a 10-point favorite in every home game? They'll probably say "No, that's crazy." But…in market terms it's the same thing. Assuming up front that the team you're betting will go 7-1 at home is crazy except for super elites (who still have to stay healthy).

Don't assume your sleeper pick is going to win all of its coin flips.

Assessments must reflect real-world math, or you'll just be gambling on whether or not you get lucky.
